Implementation of the Secretary-General’s Call to Action on Human Rights

Key results:
- Bringing the UN System together in preventing human rights violations and offering key support, in this regard, to field leaders and UN Country Teams in developing countries.
- UN support to particularly developing countries to ensure that human rights principles inform implementation of the 2030 Agenda on Sustainable Development.
- UN ensures that Resident Coordinators, UN Country Teams and heads of United Nations peace operations develop partnerships with civil society organizations particularly in developing countries.
- UN increases support to especially developing countries at field level on promoting the right to a safe, clean, healthy and sustainable environment and access to justice for environment-related concerns.

Justification for support:
The overall objective of the commitment is to strengthen respect for human rights, particularly in developing countries, through the implementation of the Secretary-General’s Call to Action on Human Rights. There is a special focus on 7 areas, whereas the first key area – rights at the core of sustainable development – specifically fleshes out actions to strengthen the UN’s support to Member States in advancing the 2030 Agenda through a human rights-based approach, recognizing that sustainable development must be underpinned by human rights.

There is a clear link between the Call to Action and the strategic aim of Denmark’s strategy for development cooperation and humanitarian action in promoting HRBA. This is considered paramount to fulfill the global obligation of making the Sustainable Development Goals a reality for everyone, and it enables the building of sustainable societies where individuals can create a future for themselves and their family.

Major risks and challenges:
- Risks that may slow down implementation of this initiative includes bureaucratic obstacles, internal reluctance by UN actors, and in sufficient member states support
- To mitigate the risks a coordination mechanism under the authority of the ASG for Strategic Coordination to ensure a continuous dialogue with relevant UN entities will be established. Further, the UN will actively engage with Member States to obtain their commitment to the different key areas and actions in the Call to Action.

Strategic objectives:
- Strengthen respect for human rights, particularly in developing countries, and to bring the UN System together in preventing human rights violations and offering key support, in this regard, to field leaders and UN Country Teams in developing countries

Justification for choice of partner:
The United Nations is in a unique position to advance the promises of the UN Charter and ensure respect for human rights. Furthermore, the centralization of the initiative under the authority of the ASG for Strategic Coordination, with a direct link to the Secretary General, will ensure the best possible conditions for UN system-wide implementation.

Summary:
The Secretary General’s Call to Action on Human Rights is after its launching widely considered as the most ambitious human rights agenda of a UN Secretary-General. The 7 calls will promote and ensure respect for human rights across the UN system to the benefit of particular developing countries where the vast majority of UN presence is located. The contribution of DKK 13 million ensure coordination of this crucial and necessary agenda until the end of 2021.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY-GENERAL’S CALL TO ACTION ON HUMAN RIGHTS

Development engagement document

1. Introduction
The present development engagement document details the objectives and management arrangements for the development cooperation concerning Implementation of the Secretary-General’s Call to Action on Human Rights from XX April 2020 to 31 December 2021 as agreed between the parties specified below.

1.1 Parties

1.2 Documentation
“The Documentation” refers to the partner documentation for the supported intervention, which is the “The Highest Aspiration – A Call to Action for Human Rights” by Antonio Guterres, United Nations Secretary General.

1.3 Contributions
Denmark, represented by the Mission of Denmark, commits to a contribution to the engagement of

   DKK 13,000,000 (thirteen million Danish Kroners)

   for the period XX April 2020 to 31 December 2021.

2. Background
Current and evolving challenges are raising worrying questions about respect for human rights. While progress has been made with respect to the way the UN works on development and peace and security, further efforts are needed to achieve more tangible results in the area of respect for human rights. More must be done to rekindle the hope of individuals and communities that human rights and fundamental freedoms can create a better world in which they can thrive.

The United Nations is in a unique position to advance the promises of the Universal Declaration on Human Rights in ways that are not remedial and palliative while providing clear support and direction to improve the situation for people on the ground, in a manner that contributes to crises being prevented, reduced or resolved. It is equally crucial for human rights to play a critical role in defining governance of the future, including from the perspective of inter-generational justice, notably in relation to climate change, challenges posed by cybersecurity developments, the nuclear threat and environmental degradation.

Against this backdrop, the Secretary-General has announced his Call to Action on how to revitalize and renew the human rights agenda for the 21st century and broaden its base of support by reaching out to its critics and engaging in dialogue and conversations with societies at large.
Premised on his commitment to make human rights and human dignity the core of the UN’s work, the Secretary-General’s Call to Action takes the promise of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and aims to make it a reality in everything the UN does.

The Secretary-General’s Call to Action will focus on 7 key areas: (1) rights at the core of sustainable development; (2) rights in times of crisis; (3) gender equality and equal rights for women; (4) public participation and civic space; (5) rights of future generations, especially climate justice; (6) human rights at the heart of collective action; and (7) new frontiers of human rights (see attached documentation). Work under these seven areas is premised on the fact that human rights are universal and indivisible, encompassing all rights: economic; social; cultural; political; civil. In this regard, all initiatives under the Call to Action will be based on solid evidence and norms and will be guided by the voices of those whose rights are affected, particularly in developing countries. Similarly, all actions will be anchored in national ownership, yet linked up globally. They will seek to bolster broad and sustained engagement with states, civil society and other stakeholders, and will be intrinsically linked to the Sustainable Development Agenda. Moreover, the Call to Action is underpinned by a strong focus on gender equality and women rights.

The work will build upon and further action taken under the Human Rights up Front initiative and in follow-up to the recommendations made by Mr. Gert Rosenthal in his report on UN’s conduct in Myanmar. These activities contribute to furthering the Call to Action by better bringing the UN System together in preventing human rights violations and offering key support, in this regard, to field leaders and UN Country Teams in developing countries.

While the Call to Action has a global outlook, its implementation will have a particular impact in developing countries. The Call to Action will strengthen UN’s work to advance human rights – which underpins all spheres of sustainable development – through UN Country Teams and peace operations in developing countries. The first key area – rights at the core of sustainable development – specifically fleshes out actions to strengthen the UN’s support to Member States in advancing the 2030 Agenda through a human rights-based approach, recognizing that sustainable development must be underpinned by human rights. This includes supporting developing countries in making full use of human rights mechanisms, including the Universal Periodic Review, in pursuing the Sustainable Development Goals, as well as designing development policies that support the most vulnerable and excluded groups. Efforts under each of the other key area of the call will also make crucial contributions to the development efforts of Member States:

- Conflicts and atrocity crimes are always detrimental to the longer-term sustainable development of a country. Stepping up UN efforts to protect rights in times of crisis is therefore key in preventing and mitigating the negative effects of crises on the long-term development efforts of a country and to support sources of resilience in developing countries.
- Gender equality and the promotion of women’s and girls’ rights is key in building inclusive societies and effective socio-economic systems in developing countries. Increasing UN efforts to realize gender equality and applying a gender perspective in all efforts of the Organisation, is crucial to advancing all Goals of the 2030 Agenda and is particularly important for the UN’s work in development settings.
Civil society is an irreplaceable partner in advancing sustainable development in all countries, in which UN Country Teams work. Under the Call to Action, the UN will increase support at the field level and through UN country Teams to broaden civic space to allow partners to play a meaningful role in advancing prosperity in their country.

It is well-known that the effects of climate change not only disproportionately affect developing countries, but also inhibits development efforts and a range of human rights, including by destroying livelihoods, increasing food insecurity and, displace populations. Civil society, human rights defenders and environmental activists, including youth, play a critical role in addressing climate change in a just manner. Through the Call to Action, the UN will increase support to these actors as well as assist Member States in promoting the right to a safe, clean, healthy and sustainable environment.

Advancing the full spectrum of human rights through collective action at the international and regional level forms a strong basis for meeting the aspirations of the 2030 Agenda and as such, is fundamental to supporting developing countries. As part of the Call to Action, the UN will strengthen capacity-building efforts to national and regional human rights institutions and mechanisms, which are crucial to developing countries.

Digital technologies carry great potential for advancing progress in developing countries by enhancing connectivity, financial inclusion, and access to trade and public services. On the other hand, gaps in access to technologies as well as the use of technologies for repressive or discriminatory purposes must be countered to effectively support the achievement of sustainable development. The UN will work to ensure human rights are applied as a framework for the use and development of new technologies in support of efforts to realize the 2030 Agenda.

The EOSG, under the overall supervision of the ASG for Strategic Coordination, with the support of the Chief, Rule of Law Unit and other relevant posts of the EOSG, will operate as the incubator of the Secretary-General’s Call to Action and will be responsible for the overall coordination of implementation, working hand in hand with relevant UN departments, funds and programs, notably the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights, as well as with relevant UN organs. To that effect, the Executive Office will constitute a core team that will lead in the strategic development and coordination of all relevant activities.

With the roll-out of the Call to Action, the UN System will gear up its work on human rights significantly, building on and deepening existing efforts. As the roll-out will be engaging a wide spectrum of UN entities, it will seek to ensure that human rights permeate all areas of work and become a natural part of the UN’s daily work across mandates, countries and levels beyond the project period. It is envisaged that the impact of the implementation of the Call will be sustained through an enhancement of the organisational culture and with the set-up of new mechanisms and the development of procedures, policies, practices, and strategies to advance human rights. Through the Call to Action, the UN’s ability to leverage the full breadth of its tools to support the promotion of all human rights will be strengthened and good practices for doing so will continue to be useful for the UN system in the future.

3. Development Engagement Objective
The overall objective of the development engagement is to strengthen respect for human rights, particularly in developing countries, through the implementation of the Secretary-General’s Call to Action on Human Rights.

The Mission of Denmark will base the support on progress attained in the implementation of the engagement as described in the documentation. Progress will be measured through the Executive Office of the Secretary-General’s monitoring framework.

4. Risk Management

The Executive Office of the Secretary-General, under the overall supervision of the ASG for Strategic Coordination, with the support of the Chief, Rule of Law Unit and other relevant capacities in the EOSG, will operate as the incubator of the Secretary-General’s Call to Action and will be responsible for the overall coordination of implementation, working hand in hand with relevant UN entities, in particular OHCHR, as well as with relevant UN organs. To that effect, the Executive Office will create a core team to lead in the strategic development and coordination of all relevant activities.

While the Call to Action seeks to develop and promote a vision for the United Nations system that is transformative, there are several risks that may slow down implementation of this initiative:

• Internal reluctance by UN actors to fully implement the Call to Action due to perceived sensitivities regarding the entities’ own agendas.
• Bureaucratic obstacles slowing down implementation of the Call to Action.
• Insufficient Member State support to fully implement the different workstreams of the Call to Action.
• Financial and budgetary constraints to UN budgets slow down implementation of initiatives under the Call to Action.

In order to mitigate the above-mentioned risks, the Executive Office of the Secretary-General will undertake the following measures:

• In order to implement the coordination strategy, the EOSG will establish a coordination mechanism, under the authority of the ASG for Strategic Coordination, to ensure a continuous dialogue with relevant UN entities. In addition, the EOSG will have regular contacts with relevant UN entities to address issues of implementation and coordinate a coherent UN system-wide approach to the roll-out of actions and activities under the Call to Action

- The EOSG will identify and map out the necessary administrative processes required to implement the Call to Action and will work in close coordination with relevant UN entities to ensure a smooth and seamless implementation of actions under the Call to Action.
- The EOSG will actively engage with Member States and other relevant stakeholders to obtain their commitment to the different key areas and actions in the Call to Action.
